

"I have remained passionately loyal to plein air painting, working outside, at one with nature, in the landscape rather than viewing it through a lens or on a screen - and I believe the consequent honesty of the work communicates itself to others. I enjoy the thought that people trust my eyes, that they can sense the inherent truth and can be confident that I have identified each and every brush stroke to paint a faithful précis of all those subtle hues and tones that my eye can identify, but only in that very moment, on that day, in that hour, as that particular cloud is speeding by...here, now, real."
